Subject: Comments Regarding Federal Regulations Including Federal Regulations Affecting S

Below are examples of too much regulation of farmers.

(1) Excessive worker protection standards and pesticide record keeping requirements.
(2) Excessive wetland regulations affecting efficiency. (3) Endangered and threatened species rules that are bogus and hinder efficiency. (4) Sodbuster rules that are over burdensome. (5) Record keeping rules for employees that they should keep themselves. Let the farmer use his own good judgment with the help of proven scientific and university trials and practices to run his own operation without the over intrusive regulations and inspections of some government agency or agencies to tell him what they think he is doing wrong and why he must be punished and then require even more stringent regulation and government oversight.
